General presentation

The International Garden Festival - Hortillonnages Amiens offers landscape creations and works of art accessible to the public, on foot or by boat, on islets of the Hortillonnages in Amiens and along the Somme river. Spread over this exceptional site, these creations pose a quirky or poetic view, sometimes funny or critical but always unexpected, a view on this complex environment, on its history, on its future and on the link between nature and culture.

Created in 2010 by the Maison de la Culture d'Amiens, this garden festival has been organised since 2018 by the association Art & jardins I Hauts-de-France: it is now part of a larger garden project that extends throughout the region. The website <https://www.artetjardins-hdf.com> allows you to discover the projects in progress.

This 13th edition of the International Garden Festival will take place from 26th May to 16th October 2022. Landscape designers, architects, visual artists and designers are invited to apply to this call for bids to create works in situ in the Hortillonnages in Amiens.

A detailed description of the Hortillonnages site, where these works will be executed, is appended.

This project has several objectives:

- to support creators
- to query the feeding function of Hortillonnages
- to develop and preserve natural and man-made heritage
- to develop a cultural project for existing populations that also attracts new populations
- to promote professional integration for young people and people in difficulty
- to participate in economic solidarity
- to develop the touristic attractiveness of the site

Eligibility criteria

This call for bids targets:

- landscape architects, landscape designers, visual artists, architects, and designers aged 45 and under who have graduated (born after the 31st December 1975).

The following are excluded from this consultation:

- designers who have created a garden or a project in the last five editions of the Festival
- the persons participating in the jury

The organizer reserves the right to invite artists of its choice outside the competition.

Applicants can be individuals or groups.

Selection

A jury comprised of qualified members (landscape architects, architects, exhibition organisers, school representatives and community cultural stakeholders) will select applicants.

Applicants will be asked to submit in one of the two categories: landscape or visual arts. Applications can be individual or collective.

The Artistic Committee will select them based on the following criteria:

For the visual art category:

- The artistic quality of the applicant's past educational and professional experience / 60%
- The quality of the cover letter / 40%

For the landscape category:

- The artistic quality of the applicant's past educational and professional experience / 60%
- The quality of the cover letter / 20%
- The applicants' consideration of natural preservation and development in an innovative way / 20%

For landscapers, the jury will be sensitive to innovative experiments that promote hybrid intervention registers.

Gardens will have to take into account the question of the fragility of the site: the work of raising awareness or questioning of the preservation of the site as well as those related to the safeguarding and the restoration of the banks will be particularly appreciated.

As the history of the Hortillonnages is closely linked to market gardening, one of the selected landscape works will be linked to this theme and will involve a redistribution of the harvests to charities.

Appendix

Description of the Hortillonnages site, Amiens

Irrigated by the Somme and Avre rivers, the Hortillonnages (from the Latin hortulani < hortus: gardens) at the heart of Amiens form a three hundred-hectare mosaic of water and greenery. The Hortillonnages came into being when the Somme widened into several indistinct ponds, thereby creating a sort of puzzle of land-based and aquatic terrains. In the Middle Ages, the inhabitants dug irrigation canals by raising levies to make the Hortillonnages an area of productive market gardens. In the 19th century, there were as many as 950 such market gardeners (or hortillons). The gardens provided the entire city with fruits and vegetables.

The Hortillonnages have expanded over time, and today they reach the villages surrounding Amiens: Camon, Rivery and Longueau. Although some of the large land parcels are still being used professionally, only 7 hortillons gardeners remain today on 36 hectares of parcels of land suitable for cultivation. Much of the land has been purchased by individuals to be developed as ornamental gardens that can be reached by small boat. This wet, semi-natural area is conducive to the growth of diverse aquatic flora and fauna and serves as a nesting site for many birds. The Hortillonnages represent the second most popular tourist attraction in Amiens, after the cathedral.

Created and shaped by humans, these Hortillonnages are fragile and require constant care. The areas that emerge about one meter above the water level can very easily become submerged when water levels rise, thereby causing the banks and the earth they contain to collapse. Furthermore, fallow land develops rapidly in non-cultivated areas, transforming gardens into marshlands and making waterways unusable. This phenomenon has accelerated due to the gradual disappearance of hortillon gardeners, who had the expertise needed to maintain the sites.

The project bid site

The site dedicated to the Garden festival is 95 hectares of Hortillonnages, and more specifically, the Ile aux Fagots and the Etang de Clermont (see the appended pictures).

The gardens are visited by the public, either by foot or by water using electric motor boats that allow them to move from one islet to another from May to October.

Projects must take into account the fragility of the site and the banks : work to raise awareness or question the preservation of the site as well as work related to the protection and rehabilitation of the banks will be particularly appreciated.

One of the selected landscape project selected will be a vegetable garden.

Water projects are possible, for landscape and visual artists, but the location of the work must be validated by the Organiser.

The visual art creations can be installed on independent parcels (or on the water), or on landscape parcels if the landscape architects agree.

Obligations related to the site

The Hortillonnages are in a natural area classified as Natura 2000: the fauna and flora are protected. The use of plant protection products is prohibited. Care must be taken not to introduce invasive plants and to avoid the use of materials that can permanently corrupt the environment.

The Hortillonnages being composed of water and floating gardens, this induces certain constraints for the realization of the works (transport of the material in a boat, no electricity on the islands) and for their conservation and evolution. These constraints must be assessed and integrated into the implementation of projects: technical implementation, planning, budget, etc.

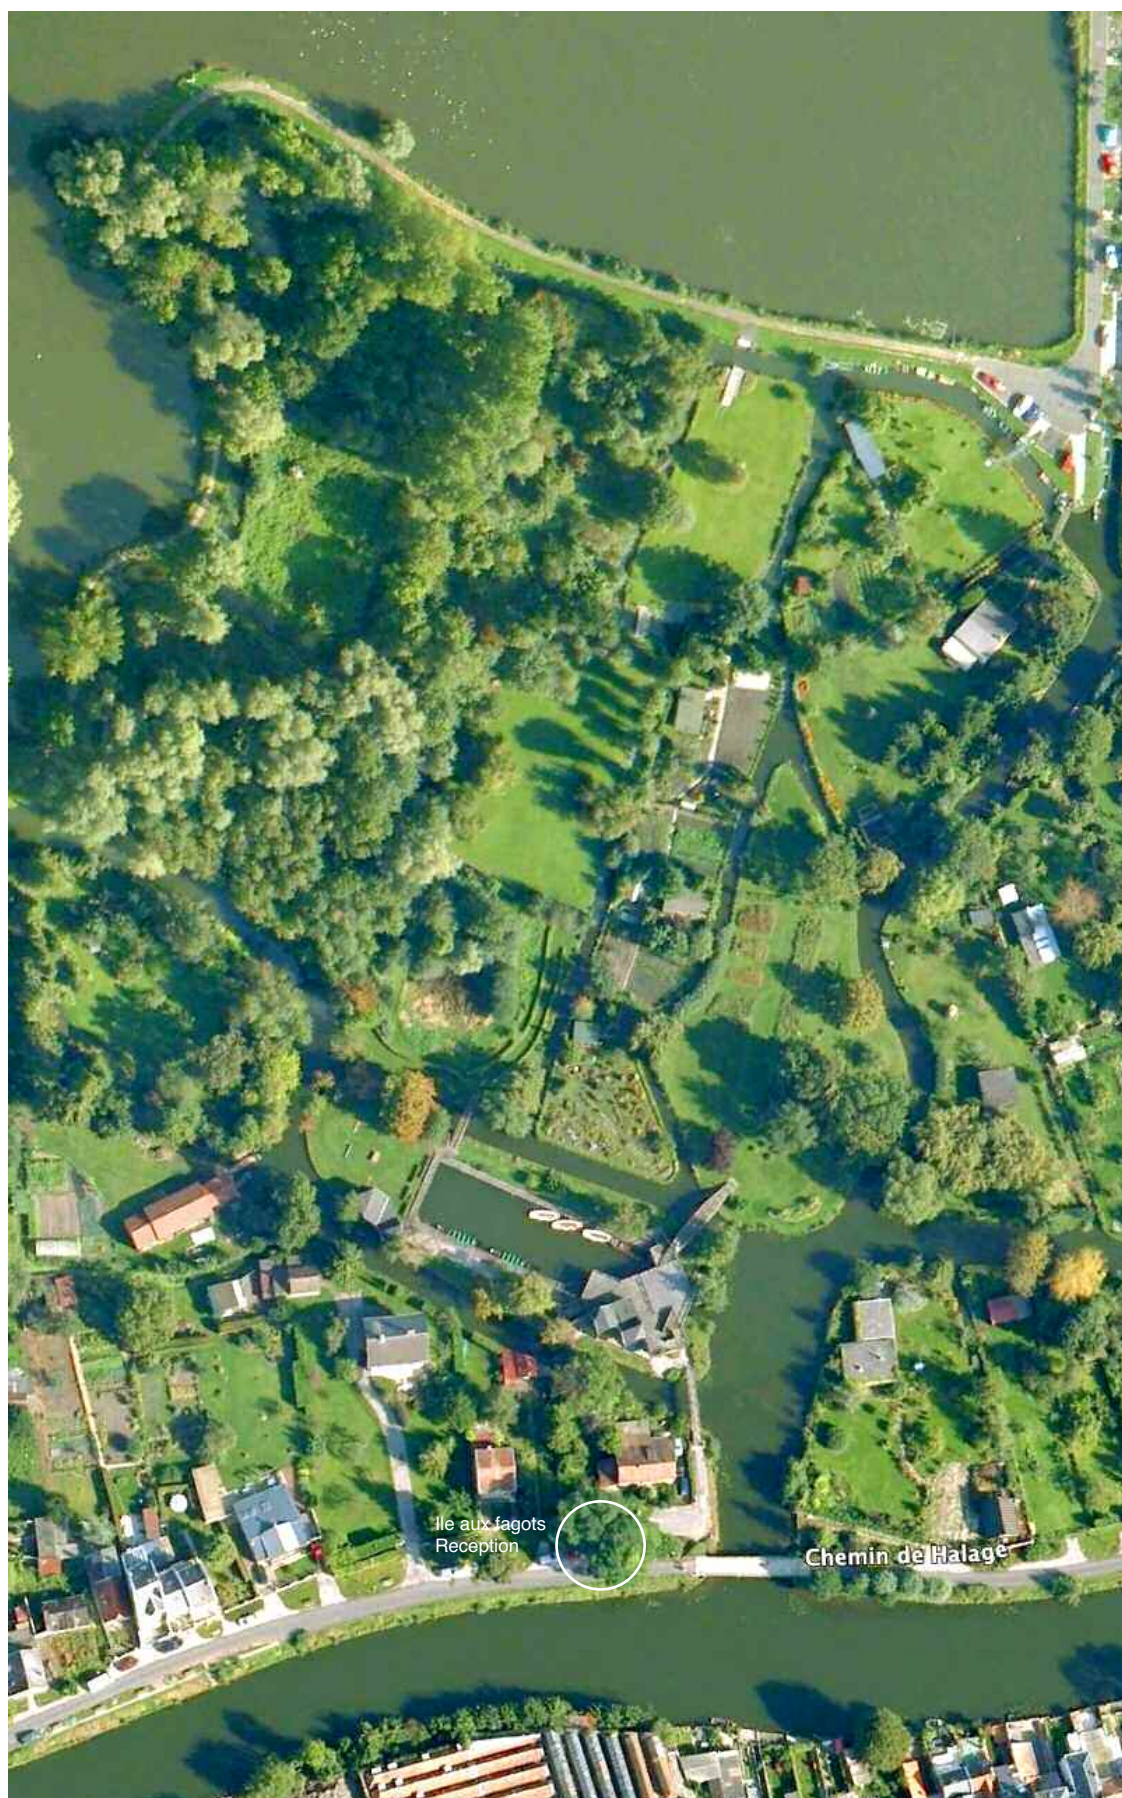

This site is a shared space: hunters, fishermen, market gardeners, private owners still have their own parcels there.

Finally, over the years, a heritage of landscape and art works has been created: some forty works from previous editions are present on the site and continue to occupy the space. Some of them are visible on the website of Art & jardins I Hauts-de-France.

The location of the new works will be done in consultation with the Organiser: it will have to take into account and respect the different existing uses as well as the presence of the previous works.
